Revised: 10/2019

Overview

The Less-Commonly-Taught Languages Center (LCTL) at the University of Pittsburgh has provided language instruction in LCTL languages for decades, with most of the current languages being offered continuously for 10 years or more. Students taking a LCTL language learn to speak, listen, read, and write in that language, just as students in commonly taught languages do. Our students stand out as individuals with a rare skill (at least for an American context), which may put them at an advantage for future job opportunities.

The Hungarian minor provides a core curriculum in language study, supplemented by coursework in related areas, which students can choose. Students completing the Hungarian minor are required to take four semesters of Hungarian language courses and one elective, for a total of 17 credits.
